Two women were killed in holiday accidents occurring in Lower Bucks County yesterday. One woman was riding in a machine which crashed at Fallsington tunnel and the other victim was struck by an automobile as she crossed the road.

Dead:
Mrs. Mary Castor, 22, 25 Yard avenue, Trenton, N. J.

Mrs. Helen Smith, 46, 379 Harrison street, Manor Park, Morrisville.

Daniel Castor, 33, driver of the car in which his wife was killed, told authorities that he was proceeding toward Trenton late last night and failed to see the sharp curve at the entrance to the Fallsington tunnel. He swerved to the right and his car turned over and caught fire. Morrisville firemen were summoned to the scene, but the blaze had been extinguished before their arrival.

Mrs. Castor was pronounced dead of a fractured skull upon being admitted to a Trenton hospital.

Castor, who received minor injuries, was also taken to the same hospital and later to police headquarters. He will be turned over today to Corporal R. D. Evans of the Oxford Valley Highway Patrol and arraigned in Bucks County on a charge of death by automobile.

UNDERGOING RENOVATIONS; CHARM OF THE FINE
OLD FARM-HOUSE AT TINICUM TO BE RETAINED

Small Outbuildings Are Torn

Renovations are under-way at the recently purchased farm-home of Alan Campbell, actor, and his well-known wife, Dorothy Parker. The property, located in Tinicum Township, is having its face "lifted," and when the large program of work is completed, the residence will be one of the most attractive and convenient in that section of Bucks county.

During the course of the renovations Dorothy Parker and her actor hubby are engaged in work on the film, "A Star Is Born," at a studio in Hollywood, California.

Partitions are being torn down, floors being remade, a modern heating plant and water system and bathroom being installed.

In the west wing of the long, rambling stone house, the kitchen is being restored with all of the original early Pennsylvania Dutch fireplace being kept intact. The beams have been polished until they shine and the cupboard and staircase doors have been scraped clean.

The east wing of the house, which was built prior to 1841, its age having been lost in antiquity, contains the original Dutch oven and a huge fire place. In the central sections of the house bedrooms have been enlarged; plans made for a nice hallway and other improvements.

The south side of the field stone farm house is having a porch built to it from which can be had a magnificent view of the rolling hills of Tinicum and the bluffs of the Delaware. Workmen are grading the terrace leading up to the house.

An artesian well, 254 feet deep, which will be the source of water supply, four other wells having been abandoned by the poet-wit and her husband, yields a flow of seven gallons a minute.

On the north side of the house two trees have been removed by a tree surgeon and landscape artist. A new single roof has been placed on the barn as well as parts of the house, and the entire stone wall of the house has been pointed.

Only the house and barn will be left standing in the wide expanse of gently rolling cedar tree bordered fields because all of the smaller buildings, including chicken houses, sheds and corn cribs, must come down so as not to mar the landscape.

Mrs. Parker is master of the slow, quick return. She spent hours in discovering what the interior of her house was really like. She and her husband, according to their care-taker, were overwhelmed with merriment when upon opening a wall closet they would find a nest of eggs.

The poet frequently writes to her caretaker asking about the progress the dozen or more workmen are making on their Tinicum home. Whether Mr. and Mrs. Campbell will return be

TWO BRISTOL MEN ARE SERIOUSLY HURT IN CRASH

Clarence W. Winter and J. S. Fine Are Both in Lakewood Hospital

CAR STRUCK A BRIDGE

Two Bristol men suffered injuries when the automobile in which they were riding crashed into a bridge at Manahawkin, N. J., last evening at five o'clock, and overturned.

The injured:
Clarence W. Winter, Mill and Wood streets, possible fracture of ribs, lacerations of the face, and injuries to his hand.

James S. Fine, Mill street, possible fracture of the skull, concussion of the brain, and lacerations of the face. Fine was unconscious when he and Winter were admitted to Paul Kimball Hospital, Lakewood, N. J.

It was stated by hospital authorities this morning that Fine was not in condition to be moved for X-rays last evening, but that slight improvement in his condition today made it possible for plans for such to be made this morning. Winter was also said to be slightly improved this morning. The accident is said to have occurred when the convertible cabriolet driven by Fine struck the bridge as the two were enroute home. The machine was greatly damaged according to Trooper Forkin, of the Toms River barracks of the New Jersey state police. The accident occurred on route S-40.

Winter and Fine were taken to the hospital in Lakewood by the trooper, an ambulance being sent from the hospital.

The local men had spent the day home with Robert Evans, in Surf City, N. J., Madison street.

Borough Council Favors
Preaching Mission Here

Bristol borough council at its November meeting addressed the preaching mission to be held here on November 30th and December 3rd, in the Bristol M. E. Church.

Today the following statement was issued by borough council:

"The Thanksgiving season ushers in to our community a series of church services which will stimulate and promote activities along religious lines.

These services will be held in the Bristol Methodist Episcopal Church. They are interdenominational and everyone is cordially invited to attend. Twenty-five churches of lower Bucks county will participate and be among those whose members will attend.

A representative presented this program to Borough Council and it received their hearty approval and this body requests every citizen, irrespective of faith or creed, to lend it support.

"During these times of 'isms and schisms,' it well behooves our people to learn anew the doctrines of Christianity; so that we may not be swayed into error by the philosophies that are heard on every side. Let us turn aside for a while and learn anew the Faith of our Fathers.

We can heartily endorse the National Preaching Mission as it comes to Bristol.

PROMINENT PHILA. MAN
KILLED BY OWN GUN

Barclay H. Warburton, Jr.,
Shot As He Climbs Over
Fence While Gunning

WALKED TO HIS HOME

Barclay H. Warburton, Jr., grandson of the late John Wanamaker, was killed in a gunning accident on his farm three miles north of Doylestown late yesterday.

Warburton, socially prominent sportsman and aviator, stumbled as he was climbing over a fence. The full charge from his shotgun entered his abdomen.

Despite the severity of his wound, he walked half a mile to his house and told his wife, the former Mrs. Evelyn Hall Pierce, to take him to a hospital at Allentown.

Accompanied by a butler, Mrs. Warburton drove her husband to the hospital. Because of the shock he had suffered and great loss of blood, surgeons could not operate immediately.

Warburton was given a blood transfusion, but he died about an hour and a half after entering the hospital.

During the transfusion operation he told physicians how the accident had occurred.

Warburton, who was 38, recently had engaged in scientific agriculture experiments on his farm. He specialized in livestock on the 94-acre farm. Friends said one of his experiments had resulted in pigs which grow to nearly twice their normal size.

He was a son of Major Barclay H. Warburton, former director of public safety in Philadelphia.

In April, 1931, Warburton abandoned a proposed round the world airplane flight to marry Mrs. Pierce, a week after she had obtained a divorce in Reno. He and his first wife were divorced in Paris in 1926.

His first marriage took place at Elkton, Md., after he and Miss Rosamond Lancaster, of Worcester, Mass., suddenly decided to change their plans for an elaborate wedding. She is now Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt.

Warburton was a lieutenant in the World War and in 1927 became connected with the moving picture industry in the role of assistant director at the Fox Studio, New York.

He also engaged in newspaper work in Philadelphia and New York for some time. His father for many years was owner of the Philadelphia Evening Telegraph.

Mrs. Warburton is a daughter of Mrs. Charles E. McManus, of Rye, N. Y. They have two children, Rose, 15, and Barclay, 14.

HIGH SCHOOL ELEVEN
SCORES A VICTORY
OVER MORRISVILLE

Bristol Bunnies Win Turkey
Day Classic by Score of 7 to 0

HUGE CROWD ATTENDS

Game Was Bitterly Fought
Throughout Its Entire Period

(By Louis Tomlinson)

In the dedication and inauguration of the new Bunny stadium, it was very fitting that the Bristol Bunnies conquered their old rivals, the Morrisville Bulldogs, 7-0, here, yesterday, in the 16th annual "turkey day" meeting of the two schools.

The fray, played before some 2500 fans, was perhaps the most colorful game of the series with the student body, business men of the town and the townspeople backing up the locals to the utmost. Flags and banners waving, cheering and singing, band music, flag-raising accompanied by music and followed by speeches, announcing or the game over an amplifying system and programs all added to the color and enthusiasm of the battle. The team was never backed so enthusiastically as yesterday.

Morrisville also was backed by a large following of rabid and hopeful fans, and between the two teams up on the most thrilling tilt seen for some time and by far the best seen here this season.

Consequently, with such backing the two teams put everything they had into the battle and the result was a close and hard-fought game.

The high wind which blew across the field all during the game and the rigid temperature greatly hampered the playing and proper execution of days for both sides. Morrisville rode with the wind during the first period and although they made use of it they were unable to profit by it. They received several chances but missed each of them as the Bunnies' forward wall strengthened when needed. Their big opportunity came near the end of the first period, when "Shorty" Phillips tumbled a kick on the 22 yard line of Bristol. Margerum recovered for the Blue and Gold and Morrisville was really knocking on the Bunnies' door, at it was not to be opened until then.

The Bulldogs kept up their sturdy fight through the second quarter and really held the upper hand the whole first half. They outplayed the Red and Gray eleven in every department. Morrisville gained 37 to 21 yards by rushing; lost 50 to 3; and made two to none in first downs.

However, in the second half the tide changed in favor of Bristol. It was in this half—the third quarter—in

SOLDIER OF PEACE

The Nobel peace prize usually has been awarded to some statesman who has labored for peace at the international conference table or to some publicist or educator who has influenced public opinion in favor of international good will. Such contributions to civilization are worthy of recognition; but even worthier of recognition is the sacrifice of a man willing to undergo persecution, imprisonment and the risk of death in behalf of peace.

So Karl von Ossietzky is in a class by himself as a Nobel peace prize winner. His release from a Nazi concentration camp, after three years' imprisonment, was officially explained on the ground that he was "no longer considered dangerous." The release coincided, however, with resignation from the Nobel peace prize committee of the Norwegian foreign minister and a former premier of Norway, both of whom apparently feared diplomatic complications with Germany if they participated in awarding the prize to Von Ossietzky.

This indicates at least a trace of Nazi sensitiveness to world opinion. If the Nobel peace prize were awarded to Von Ossietzky while he still was in a concentration camp, the eyes of the world would be focused on the brave German liberal and pacifist; and his imprisonment would become a source of diplomatic embarrassment to the Nazi government.

Such embarrassment will not be averted altogether by Von Ossietzky's belated release. To the free peoples of the world, the gallant Von Ossietzky, in precarious health after his rigorous captivity, stands forth as a heroic figure—a soldier of peace who will may be remembered long after his oppressors shall have met the humiliation which they so richly deserve.

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK

The curtain fell some years ago on the operatic career of Mme. Schumann-Heink, the gifted contralto. That was a loss to the musical world. Now the curtain has fallen on the far nobler career of Ernestine Schumann-Heink, woman. And that is a loss to all the world.

The great voice of Schumann-Heink will not be forgotten, of course; but it was the great heart of Schumann-Heink which assured her of immortality in her countrymen's memory. During the dark days of the World War, when one of her sons was killed fighting for Germany and another met death as a soldier of the United States, Ernestine Schumann-Heink became a symbol of the heroic love which transcended the bitterness of the times and embraced the victims of war in all lands.

In the years since, she continued as a symbol of the spirit to which men looked for guidance to peace.

When Russia has dropped a battalion by parachute on enemy soil, and the foe has done the same in Russia, all will be confusion.

Back in the old home town, when a romance had gone as far as the King- and-Wally business, some foxy would call, "Why don't you marry the girl?"

"LOVE'S LITANY" by Hazel Livingston

SYNOPSIS

Christine Cooper, 17 and lovely, is the daughter of the rich and eccentric Adolphus Cooper, who made his money in the Klondike, never speaks of the past, and hates cities. Indolent by nature, and already well along in years, he never assumed the position that his wealth might have given him. Instead, he built a home in the California Mother Lode country, near a little town called Spanish Pass. While he dreams of the great things he will do for Christine by and by, she grows up with the boys and girls of the mountain community, an innocent and adventurous young tomboy. Left alone in the isolated ranch house for a few days, she is visited by a childhood chum and sweetheart, Gene Dubois.

CHAPTER II

He sat on the veranda railing, dangling his feet, while she went into the cool shaded house. It was comfortable here, on the Cooper place. If you could live in a place like this, with ice, and electric lights and plumbing and everything, living in the sticks wouldn't be so bad. She came back with two clinking, frosted glasses. "Orange juice. I found a whole pitcher of it in the ice box. That was all the chocolate cake, but there are lots of these cookies. . . . Gene, are you going to stay home for good?"

"I don't know. Guess so. Oh, I don't care. My Uncle Paul got the chance to do Mrs. Jennings' assessment work—she's got a claim over by Whiskey Slide—so he's leaving Monday, and I had to come back. Oh, I don't care. I might as well be working in a dairy in Spanish Pass, as a gas station in Sacramento. It isn't as if I could do as I want, anyway."

She nodded, a little embarrassed. She knew what he meant. She knew more than he intended she should know. About him. About his troubles. She knew, what he hoped she didn't know, about his folks. About big Pete Dubois, who always a little tipsy, and usually good natured, could fly into sudden frightful tempers, and beat up his entire family with the old rawhide whip that hung in the shed, a step from the Dubois back door.

She knew why mournful little Madame Dubois, with her grey head swathed in a woolen shawl, would not venture beyond the turkey run for days at a time. Why Adrienne, Gene's little sister, stayed out of school sometimes, and what had caused the thin white scar that sometimes showed so plainly on Gene's olive cheek.

And she knew, what he didn't mind her knowing—about his ambition to be an artist. He had sketched her, for years. He had sketched every tree for miles. He had sketched the ruined mine shafts, the old prospectors, the tumble-down adobe on the fringe of the town.

But that was a secret too, for old Pete Dubois wouldn't stand for such "nonsense."

She lowered her eyes. While she had been thinking about Gene he had been looking at her.

"What are you looking at me—funny for?"

"You look nice in a dress," he said, flushing a little.

"Oh, I wear them all the time now, except when I'm riding. Aunt Nettie had fits over the kind of clothes I used to wear. Anyway, this sort of thing is cool."

She patted a sheer white ruffle, swung a slim, stockingless leg that ended in a white, strappled sandal.

"You look nice in them," he said again. He had to say something. He couldn't tell her that he'd never before thought of her as a girl. A girl with white ruffles, and high heels. A girl . . . maybe not so different from the other girls he'd played around with in Sacramento in the spring. . . .

He looked at Christine, at her skin that was smooth, pink satin, at her shimmering, gold-colored hair. He'd always known that she was beautiful, but until this minute he'd never realized. . . .

"Well, I better be going. I'll be seeing you again."

She swallowed the last of the chocolate caramels, and divided the remaining three buttercream ones between the five drooling dogs that had congregated at the rustle of the candy bag.

"Wait a minute, and I'll get on my jeans and ride back as far as Platt's with you. Dad had to go to the city, so I'm going to stay with Gladys for a couple of days."

When she stood up the little white fore. Tell him that he COULD be something, that he had real talent, that he'd be a great painter some day, and people would be proud to know him, and some day they'd come to look at the house where he had lived in Spanish Pass, the way they did now to see the little house where Mark Twain had once lived, up near Angel's Camp.

And now he had his arms around her.

His face was close to hers. She was looking into his dark, troubled eyes, questioning, a little worried. He had his arms around her, and that was nothing—he'd often done it before, but . . . this was different. . . .

She could see her own image in his eyes, and now there were tears dress clung to her warm body, revealing its sculptured roundness. The pinto, quietly nibbling the cool green clover of the "lawn," had just shot in society with Aunt Nettie and all your dad's dough—

"Gene, don't! Please don't talk that way!"

"I'm not! You're crazy! You don't know what you've got. You wouldn't wipe your feet on me. And why should you? I'll never be anything but a failure, and . . ."

"Let go of me, Christine. Let go of me, or I'll . . ."

She had her arms tight around him. She was going to comfort him, to talk him out of the blues, as she had so many, many times be-

Winter Playground Again Beckons Tourist Trade

More than 2,000,000 visitors are expected by Florida this season, indicating the growing importance of the tourist trade, not only to this winter playground but also to other states. The record influx of travelers anticipated by the peninsular state this winter has resulted in a building boom of major proportions with more than $20,000,000 being spent in new construction at Miami and Palm Beach alone.

Indolent by nature, and already well along in years, he never assumed the position that his wealth might have given him. While he dreams of the great things he will do for Christine by and by, she grows up with the boys and girls of the mountain community, an innocent and adventurous young tomboy. Left alone in the isolated ranch house for a few days, she is visited by a childhood chum and sweetheart, Gene Dubois, who discovers that while he has been away in the city, the little Cooper girl has been growing into a surprisingly attractive young woman.

Swept off her feet by his sudden, impetuous love making, Christine feels that this is the great moment of her life.

CHAPTER III

The birds awakened her, as they always did.

For a moment she lay very still, listening, half smiling, still reluctant to open her eyes.

Then she remembered. She felt the roughness of the blankets, the harsh springiness of the pine boughs beneath her. For a moment, pure panic seized her. She hadn't dreamed it then. . . . It was real. . . . She must have been crazy.

For seconds that seemed like hours, and minutes that stretched to eternity, she lay with eyes closed, hand clenched till fingernails bit into palms, a tense, aching bundle of misery.

What had she done? What awful thing had she, Christine Cooper, done? Whatever made her . . .

With the back of her hand she wiped the perspiration from her forehead. With a great effort of will, she made herself stop that senseless shaking.

She opened her eyes, looked about her cautiously.

When she saw that she was quite alone, the first suffocating panic left her.

She was lying on a bed of pine boughs, in a little clearing partially surrounded by young pines and laurel brush. The ground was covered with a thick, dark green carpet of the white-flowered "mountain misery" that smells like witch hazel. Letty, the old mother dog, was curled up beside her.

Somewhere, not far away, a horse whinnied. A dog barked, and a bushy tailed gray squirrel scolded caustically from the giant cedar just beyond the little clearing.

Christie stretched, and yawned. She was fully awake now—except for a nice, comfortable laziness—and she remembered everything and wasn't scared and panicky, the way she'd been at first.

What was there to be scared about? Everything was all right—she was camping out, just as she had done dozens and dozens of times before . . . and that it was with Gene, and they were alone on the mountain was all right too, because they loved each other, and when two people love each other nothing else matters. . . . Everything else just has to work into that pattern, that's all.

Dad. . . . But Dad would understand. He'd be surprised, but he'd understand. He'd buy a ranch for Gene, or give him a mine. . . .

"Gene!" She sat up, on the fir bough bed, and shouted for him. She was going to ask him whether he'd rather have her ask Dad for a ranch, or a mine. Or maybe they could stake a claim—Dad would know about that—and do a little ranching too. But not raise cattle, because Gene didn't like that. Just vegetables and turkeys.

"Gene!" He didn't answer. She could hear him chopping wood way down below the creek. She could smell coffee, too. Perhaps it was just as well. All those details could come later. They'd have breakfast first.

The water in the creek that flowed past the camp was crystal clear, and icy cold. She was glad that she had remembered to bring some of Aunt Nettie's sweet-smelling soap. She scrubbed and splashed happily, and dried on the still damp towel that Gene had used. His old blue sweater was lying on a boulder, and she slipped that on, partly because the icy water had chilled her, and partly because it was his.

"Christie—you—you aren't sorry?"

"She twisted out of his arms. "Course not! Look! The fire's burning down. I'm hungry! Aren't you? I'll cook the bacon!"

"No, I'll cook it. Let me, Christie!" They both cooked. They got in each other's way, and burned the toast and got smoke in their eyes, and laughed, and loved it. They ate quantities of everything, and drank all the strong, steaming coffee in the big iron pot.

Then Gene stretched out on the ground near the creek, and smoked, while Christie washed the dishes.

She wouldn't let him help her. She wanted to do it all. There was something about working, while he and wearing something he had worn was like being close to him.

She laid her cheek caressingly against it, before she slipped it over her head.

She hadn't known you could feel like that. . . . hadn't known what love was like. But she knew now. From now on she wasn't just Dolph Cooper's girl, she was herself. . . . herself, yet part of Gene, which must be what was meant by "one flesh."

"It's just as if I was never really alive until now," she thought, exultantly.

Everything was brighter, lovelier. Surely she had never heard the birds sing like that. And the sky, the patches of it that she could see through the interlacing branches above, was such a bright, brilliant blue. The very air was different.

She turned, as the dogs raced through the brush, ahead of Gene who had his arms full of firewood.

He didn't meet her eyes at first. There was one little minute that the first cold fear came back. She must have seemed very lovely and young and appealing, as she knelt by the little stream in her boyish sweater and jeans, all rosy from the vigor.

scrubbing with the soap and towel she still held in her hands. He dropped the firewood and ran to her, to take her into his arms.

So the moment that threatened to be panic passed.

lay by the stream and indolently smoked, that filled her with almost breathtaking happiness. When she looked over at him, relaxed and lazy in the sun that was filtering through the interlaced maple and dogwood branches, she saw him through a film of absurd, happy tears.

"Sure you don't want me to wash the frying pan for you, honey?" "No—honestly."

"Swell. But I think you're a funny girl."

"Maybe that's why I love you!"

"I know it's why I love you!"

They both laughed, joyously.

She added more soap to the cooling dishwater, and stealthily wiped her eyes with the back of her hand. It was good to joke about things you couldn't bear to talk about. . . . She couldn't tell him that she wanted to do much more than wash dishes for him, that she wanted to do something big—sacrifice, and suffer.

"I'd like to paint you that way, Christie."

"Washing dishes? Well, I'd rather have my portrait in the Legion of Honor, some other way."

"Oh, I don't mean that. The way you were looking. Sort of exalted, like Joan of Arc, or some of the saints, with the gold of your hair all shimmering and the little shadows of the leaves flicking across it."

Doctors say your kidneys contain 15 miles of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste. Frequent or scanty passages with stinging and burning shows there may be something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

An excess of acids or poisons in your blood, when due to functional kidney disorders, may be the cause of nagging backache, rheumatic pains, hiccups, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

NOW-ADDED PROTECTION FOR MOTHERS AND BABIES

CASTANEA

IRRADIATED VITAMIN-D MILK

TODAY'S mothers — and today's children — are lucky! A recent great step forward in milk production offers them both a new protection for bones and teeth.

Castanea's Irradiated Vitamin D Milk brings Bristol families the benefits of this discovery. Its regular use solves one of the most difficult diet problems of the expectant and nursing mother. It provides the calcium phosphorus and Vitamin D necessary to protect the mother from robbing her own bones and teeth to supply her child with these bone-building materials and to safeguard the baby against rickets and faulty bone and tooth structure.

Never before has it been possible to do this with just one food. It is possible today because science has proved that the Vitamin D content of milk may be made sufficient by exposure to the ultra-violet rays of carbon arc lamps to assure the proper utilization of the calcium and phosphorus in milk.

The method of irradiation which the Castanea Dairy uses does not change the food value of the milk or the other vitamins. It leaves the flavor sweet, delicious, country fresh . . . and adds only a cent a quart to the cost of the milk. Start drinking a quart a day from now on.

FREE BOOKLET: Ask any Castanea Dairy milkman or send a postcard requesting a free copy of our booklet about Castanea's Irradiated Vitamin D Milk and the benefits it offers your entire family.

THE COST: Only 1c more a quart than CASTANEA'S Grade A and Grade B Milk. Ask for descriptive pamphlet.

DEADLOCK ENDS "RECS" AND ST. ANN'S CLASH

Before 500 shivering rooters, the St. Ann's Golden Avalanche and the Bristol Recreation Center battled to a 7-7 deadlock yesterday afternoon on Landreth's field in one of the best tilts seen here this season.

The players gave everything they had in the sixty minutes of playing and every known tactic in the gridiron sport was used in an effort to score a victory. Incidentally, the playing was clean and not one argument prevailed. The "Recs" scored in the second period and held the lead until the final session.

"Gige" Dougherty scored the touchdown for the Rees. After a bad kick by Borneice went out of bounds, "Henny" Mellor smashed the line for seven yards. On the next play, Dougherty on a spinner went through the center of the line for twenty-three yards and scored without a hand being laid on him. Joe Dougherty was rushed into the fray and with G. Dougherty holding the oval, he planted it between the uprights to give the Sixth Warders a 7-0 edge.

The count remained thus until about the middle of the final quarter. After a pass had been intercepted by Bobby Rue, the Rees shifted their attack and went into the air. Dougherty faded back and heaved an aerial attempted for Tommy Baines but "Punkie" Zeffries, Purple and Gold quarterback, rushed in, leaped, and grabbed the pigskin and began a mad dash for Touchdownland. Two co-mates took out the first two Rec players who gave chase and it was only "Gige" Dougherty between him and the goal line. By putting on extra speed, Zeffries managed to outrun the Recreation safety man to complete his sixty-five yard run for a touchdown.

Coach Bill Dougherty rushed Joe Conti into the fray and the Rees thought that this was the sign of a placement kick for the extra point but instead "Aussie" Bono took the oval and on a short line buck went over the chalk mark for the deadlocking point of the game.

In the third period, the Rees passed up a scoring opportunity, being stopped on the one yard line after Dougherty had completed a thirty-yard pass to Joe Flatch. Flatch made a wonderful catch of the ball, getting in the middle to two St. Ann's backs to make the catch. Three line plays and an end run failed to carry the ball over after the six yard line was reached.

Later in the period, St. Ann's, reached the eleven yard line on a pass to Carnvale, end runs by Borneice and Tosti, and a short line buck by Bono but on a sweeping end run, Tosti was thrown for an eleven yard loss and all hopes for a St. Ann's score faded until Zeffries made his run.

The star of the tilt was "Henny" Mellor, the Fergusonville wildcat. Mellor tore the St. Ann's line to shreds with his continual bucking and did most of the yard-going of the afternoon. He was responsible for most of his club's nine first downs which was four more than St. Ann's had.

High School Eleven Scores Triumph Over Morrisville

which Coach Dougherty's proteges produced their lone tally. And actually the touchdown was tainted quite a little. Midway in the period a pass, Bauroth to Carnvale, was completed to Morrisville's 30 yard line and was good for five yards. An immediate five yard gain again gave Bristol a first down on Morrisville's 25 yard line. Here is where "Lady Luck" smiled at the Bunnies. Bauroth threw a pass intended for Carnvale. The ball was batted down by a Morrisville back on the ten yard line into the hands of Tom Proffy, who laterally to Carnvale; the latter being downed on the three yard line. A two yard gain was followed by the winning play. Orazi plunged through center for the necessary one yard and the winning score. Bauroth added the extra point to make it 7-0 for Bristol.

In between that there was nothing of importance but plenty to excite one. There were many losses, several "barely" incompleting forward passes that could and would have told a different tale, plays that kept the fans on edge throughout; blocked kicks, lateral, backs almost breaking into the clear; fumbles, fumbled kicks, and many other varieties of thrills.

The kicking of Pidcock kept Bristol in dangerous territory quite frequently, especially during the first half, while Morrisville was continually in danger zones in the last half.

In the second half Bristol gained 36 yards by rushing and lost 50, while Morrisville gained 33 and lost 20 in like manner. The Bunnies made their entire 19 first downs in the last half, while the Bulldogs could not make a single first down.

During the entire game Bristol gained a total of 87 yards, while losing 53, making a net gain of 34 yards by rushing. Morrisville, on the other hand, gained 70 yards and lost 50, making a net gain of 20 yards. This alone shows the keenness and closeness of the extremely hard-fought battle. Bristol made 10 first downs to Morrisville's two; they attempted 23 passes and completed seven for a total of 90 yards, while Morrisville attempted only four airds, and completed one for five yards. The Bunnies kicked 12 times for an average of 29 yards, whereas the Blue and Gold kicked 14 times for an average of 32 yards, again showing the evenly matched teams.

This game marked the swan song of no less than 11 of the Cardinal and Gray warriors, who have participated (all played in this game) in their last scheduled game of football for Bristol. Among those 11, seven were in the starting lineup. They were: Phil Carnvale, end; Carmon Gullato, tackle; Tom Proffy, guard; Frank Mignoni, center; Roy Hatcher, guard; Carman Mignoni, tackle; and Harry Bauroth, quarterback. The other four to leave are: Harry Hinman, guard; Joe Smy-der, end; Irv Hoffman, back; and Sam Bragg, also a back. Each of these members of the squad who leave draw a number from a hat for the football, a token of the game. This year the ball was won by Roy Hatcher. For the third consecutive time a guard won the ball. In 1934, Erny Orazi won it; in 1935, Al Proffy won it; and this year Roy Hatcher took it—all were guards for B. H. S.

Captain Tom Proffy and Carman Gullato stood out as the leading stalwarts in the Bunnies line, while Captain Jim Margerum, Joe Schwind and Joe Pidcock stood out in the losers' cause.

It might also be interesting to note that "Big Ed" McGinley, a former Bristol High student, played a great game at center for the losers and he played the entire game.

The annual "turkey day" classic rings down the curtain on another grid season, and this one without a doubt, was the best season a Bristol squad ever enjoyed. Nine victories—all in a row—and only one defeat, that one at the hands of Abington in the opening game of the season, 13-7; but just enough to mar an undefeated, untied season, something never accomplished by a local eleven. And by looking over next year's schedule the prospects are not bright to look forward to one next year, especially with so many veterans being lost to the squad.

Yesterday's game, incidentally marked the first time this year that the Bunnies haven't won by more than ten points, and only the second time they could only score one touchdown, the other being the Abington game.

Next year's schedule will be released as soon as completed; that in the near future.

a charge of death by automobile by Corporal R. D. Evans, of the Oxford Valley Highway Patrol. He was arraigned before Justice of the Peace Neal Nolan, Morrisville, and held under $2,000 bail for grand jury action. Chief of Police Albert Cooper also assisted in the investigation.

Mrs. Smith was the widow of Walter Smith and is survived by a son, Walter, Jr., 7; two sisters, Mrs. Bernard Flanagan, of Trenton, and Mrs. Elizabeth Ross, of West Philadelphia; her father, John Euler, and a brother, Henry Euler.

Returning at six o'clock last night from the Penn-Cornell football game at Philadelphia, a car containing three Newarkers and a young New York woman overturned and caught fire at the Pullington tunnel, below Morrisville.

Mechanics of Bellardo's Garage near the tunnel pulled the occupants from the machine before the flames reached them. Two young women in the car were treated by Dr. Theodore Cohen, of Morrisville, for bruises and injuries about the head. They were Miss Muriel Kahn, 22, of 3202 Kosuth avenue, New York City, and Miss Pauline Jordan, 22, 185 Keer avenue, Newark.

Also in the car were Miss Jordan's father, Abraham, and Morris Poznak, 189 Keer avenue, Newark. They were unhurt. Union and Capitol Fire Companies, of Morrisville, were called but the fire was extinguished before they arrived.

Two men escaped serious injury in another accident early last evening on the Pennsylvania River Road, near New Hope, when their car plunged over a six-foot embankment after sideswiping a car driven by Mrs. Bertha H. Smoyer, 33, of New Hope.
